Monica Williams Monroe, Partner-in-Charge of the San Francisco office, focuses her complex civil litigation practice in the commercial and product liability arenas.

In her capacity as both local and national counsel, Monica represents a variety of corporate and insurance interests, including those of technology companies and product manufacturers. Monica advises on contracts and litigates business and product liability disputes from inception through trial and appeal. Monica also provides solution driven pre-litigation counseling, which identifies and addresses potential litigation risks. Monica's holistic approach as a trusted adviser supports internal client business and legal teams that fill her portfolio with lasting client partnerships.

Monica defends clients throughout California and stretching to the northwest and western states. She appears in state and federal courts, has arbitrated, mediated, jury tried and bench tried numerous cases. Monica is known for her sophisticated work with client engineers and design teams, as well as legal departments, which lay the foundation for her winning legal theories.

Monica is a longtime member of the Tucker Ellis Equity & Inclusion Committee, serving to support minority and underrepresented groups through the development of sustained diversity initiatives throughout the firm.
