Spencer Krebs focuses his practice on construction law, complex commercial and business litigation, and community association law.

Spencer represents construction industry clients, including owners, condominium and homeowners' associations, contractors, suppliers, architects and engineers, and design professionals. His litigation practice includes representing clients at trial and in arbitrations, mediations, and appeals involving a wide range of construction and real estate matters related to construction defect or delay claims, design negligence, contractual disputes, insurance coverage issues, and payment disputes.

On the transactional side, Spencer provides advice and counsel on a variety of issues, including construction contracts, design agreements, leases, and other contract documents.

Experienced in all aspects of disputes concerning business transactions and relationships – from pre-litigation counseling to appellate advocacy – Spencer has successfully resolved lawsuits involving breach of contract claims, business torts, shareholder disputes, and insurance coverage.

Spencer also works closely with companies ranging from start-ups and family businesses to multinational corporations to obtain achievable goals that consider both business and legal interests.

Spencer lives in Kamm's Corner. In his spare time, he enjoys cooking, golfing, traveling, hiking with his dog Athena, and rooting for Cleveland's sports teams.
