

Mergers & Acquisitions

Overview

The Tucker Ellis Mergers & Acquisitions Group has extensive experience in the broad range of issues that confront our clients in today's transactional environment. We bring a coordinated, multidisciplinary team to every transaction, drawing upon our many practices—acquisition financing, tax, intellectual property, real estate, employee benefits, labor and employment, environmental, and antitrust — depending on what the deal requires.

What sets Tucker Ellis apart from other firms is our singular focus on client service. We understand that every transaction is important to our clients, and our lawyers bring the same commitment to each matter. We also know that transactional work does not follow a 9 to 5 schedule, and in many cases, our clients are busy running their businesses while trying to balance transactions. Whatever time of the day or night, any day of the week, our attorneys are available when our clients need us most.

We also know that our clients don't pursue transactions in a vacuum. We learn why a particular transaction is strategic to our client, and approach the transaction from that perspective. We understand the risks of that particular transaction to that particular client, and we focus only on the issues that are relevant to the matter at hand.

We also recognize that negotiating a transaction is not about keeping score on deal points won or lost or taking polarizing positions in deal documentation. It is not constructive, cost efficient, or effective to bring an adversarial tone to transaction negotiations. Negotiating is about articulating our client's interest in a transaction and making sure that the documentation not only protects our client's interests, but also resolves the myriad and idiosyncratic issues that arise in transactions in a common sense fashion. In short, the documentation needs to make sense for that deal. We do not depend on precedent or deal studies to dictate how we structure and negotiate deals. We know how every article, section, paragraph, and clause in a purchase agreement functions and why it's there.

In short, from planning, to due diligence, to drafting and negotiating, and finally to closing the deal, we are there for our clients. We understand the issues that need to be addressed, and we work efficiently and effectively with our client, its advisors, and opposing counsel to get the deal done.

Our practice is ranked in IFLR1000 United States, as well as in Chambers USA in the area of Corporate/M&A (Ohio: North), where sources describe our team as "big enough to have the needed talent but agile enough to respond to client needs" and commend our "exceptional service" and "ability to analyze complex situations and areas of law."
